Dear Warren,

It was a pleasant surprise last Christmas to receive your letter and to somewhat get up to date on the events in your life since leaving cinema in 1942. My wife and I are planning to be in Chicago the first of next week and we would enjoy very much seeing you if you have the time. Perhaps we could meet Tuesday or Wednesday before lunch.

Many, many changes have taken place at USC since the war which I am sure you would find interesting and which would take a book to describe.

In the event that I don't hear from you by the end of the week, I will give you a call at the phone number mentioned on your letter. We both look forward to seeing you and your family if that should be possible.

Very sincerely,

GREETINGS OF THE SEASON!

WE TRUST IT WILL BRING YOU ONLY THE BEST OF EVERYTHING
THIS YEAR AND IN THE YEARS TO COME!

After being scattered between New York, Chicago and California for most of 1950 and much of 1951, we are now located in the village of River Forest, Illinois, eight miles west of Chicago, in a comfortable old Frank Lloyd Wright bungalow. Built in 1908, it is an interesting house, the prototype for many of his later renowned designs.

Warren closed out the India business in 1950 after devaluation of the British Pound, and on December 14th was named Chairman of the Board of Cline Electric Manufacturing Company here in Chicago. He is, as usual, in quite a whirl (enough to keep his weight at 1929 levels), what with the Company's normal civilian business (making and selling industrial electrical control equipment) and its defense activities (making 20 MM guns and related items).

Toby has entered first grade with seam-bursting enthusiasm. Our yard buzzes with lusty neighborhood playmates. "A neat gang", says Toby. He is ecstatic over snow play, and the Forest Preserve woods adjacent to our house which provide many adventures and the prospect of good sledding. He loves music, has a growing record collection, and sings loud and constant accompaniments to everything from Prokofief to Handel.

Terry has spent most of her time here "getting settled", but is now exploring the local music horizon and will be resuming her usual activities in the New Year. She finds Chicago stimulating, with a varied fare of fine art exhibits, music, theater, etc., and a bustling energy, a breezy quality (no pun intended), and a fine warm-heartedness.

Though our summer was mainly work for Warren and house-hunting for Terry, we did find time now and then to enjoy the straw-hat theater circuit, explore our new city, and sample the fine beaches and surrounding countryside.

One of the things that pleases us most about our new location is that we are still astride main travel routes many of our friends will be using on their cross-country jaunts. We count on seeing as many from afar as we did in New York. Our latch-string is always out; we would love to hear from you and see you.

Happy holidays - and all the best!
